Smith & Wesson's first 1911 is a handsome, reliable no-nonsense sidearm with lifetime guarantee.

The letters SW and the number 1911 have never been used in the same sentence before, but here they are on the slide of a full-sized .45 that might someday be called "old reliable" by more than one police officer.

This gun's version of the Schwartz system utilizes a wide, flat contact area on the plunger to push the firing pin block out of the way.

The SW1911 uses an externally mounted extractor pinned into place. The cutaway at the rear of the barrel hood is a loaded chamber indicator.
